

Horror in Nepal's 'worst-hit' village

In Nepal recently, there has been a life threatening earthquake. A small village that was nestled in the mountain forest at the base. This village is called Kathmandu, the village said that an estimated 178 local people died. That is nearly one for every family in the district. This was the devastating effects not from the earthquake, but from the mudslide that recurred afterwards

By ellie Campbell

No one knows how many tourists have lost their lives . It was almost lunchtime when the quake struck. 150 trekkers could have died in the disaster. There is only one man from the uk feared dead. His name is Mathew Carapiet but we fear there may be more.

The investigation is still on Going. Please donate 20 pounds to the disaster charity.